TIBET - RETURN TO THE HOLY MOUNTAIN

In so many ways this is the ultimate trek and should not be undertaken lightly. However although most of the trekking is relatively easy, one is at high altitude for some time which makes the experience difficult. However it is hugely rewarding trek to a genuinely remote part of the World.

Colours are nowhere more intense than in this mountainous desert and the stars at night have to be seen to be believed .

Mount Kailash is a holy mountain for Hindus and Buddhists and it is forbidden to climb the peak. It is not in the Himalayas but is the highest peak in an ancient range, which existed before the Himalayan mountains and the Tibetan plateau were formed. It is steeped with mythological significance and is a magnet for pilgrims especially Tibetan Buddhists who believe their souls will be cleansed by making the pilgrimage.

After circumnavigating the Mountain we travel to the source of the mighty River Indus. Returning to Kathmandu though Eastern Tibet visiting Lhasa with the great Potala Monastery and passing Mount Everest north face on the return leg of the drive.

Route: Delhi – Kathmandu – Simikot – Humla Karnali Valley – Taklakot – Darchen – Kora of Mount Kailash – Source of the Indus – Soge La - Drongpa – Xigatse – Lhasa – Kathmandu - Delhi.
